

What are Continuing Education Units and other Frequently Asked Questions

MindLeaders is currently partnering with several accrediting bodies to offer Continuing Education Units (CEUs). CEUs are a national measure of completion of non-credit professional development learning activities by an approved provider.

CEUs can be used to

- Provide employers with a history of an employee's professional development activities.
- Apply for relicensure or recertification, as defined by state agencies or professional organizations.
- Provide a basis for an employee's eligibility for a salary increase or promotion.
- Accrue college credit, based on an institution's requirements for translating life experiences to college credit.
- Provide a record for Lifelong Learning Tax Credits.

Who can earn CEUs? How?

Anyone taking a MindLeaders course from any source can get CEUs from a partnering accrediting body. Accrediting bodies may include state governments and their administrative bodies, as well as professional organizations and bodies that represent groups of universities.

Students must send the relevant documentation and payment to the accrediting institution and will receive a certificate granting CEUs within a few weeks of initiating the request.

How are CEUs granted?

Typically, CEUs will be granted by the accrediting institution if the following items are sent to that organization: score sheet showing a mastery score on each unit; student's name, address, phone number, social security number, and credit card information or money order; a completed course evaluation; and a statement certifying that the person requesting the CEUs is the person who took the test.

How much are students charged?

A minimal fee (determined by each accrediting body) is charged for each course completed for CEU credit.
